

Evaluation Report

I finished my website for my personal digital portfolio. I am very proud of what I created.

For the whole website of three pages / tabs consisting of an “About Me” page, a “Gallery” page and a “Contact Me” page, I didn’t go overboard with the design and how the website is structured. I added a white navbar with the title of that specific tab and links to the other tabs that are all links up in code so if you are on the About Me tab and click the Gallery link on both the navbar and the footer it will take you to the Gallery tab. In the background of all the tabs I added a gradient of two blue shades.

I also added a footer which also has said links, the footer had 3 different designs that I was considering going for, the one I decided to do was the links on the right and nothing on the left. My original design for the footer was the links on the right and “lorem” text on the left, I ended up scraping this idea because I thought that the “lorem” text looked ugly, but I didn’t know what to add as text instead of the “lorem” text. My second idea was suggested to me by a family member who tested out my finished website, I was told to leave the links on the right and add an Instagram link like I did on the Contact Me page on the left. I really liked the suggestion however, when I implemented it to my code the Instagram logo image was way too big and it made the whole footer expand, I tried fixing it, but I couldn’t find a way to make the image smaller and make everything look good and fitting.

In the middle of the About Me page I added a dark blue box with another box in the middle that has a subtle drop shadow of 1px to show that there’s another box without adjusting colour. Inside the smaller box I added the main content about me as an intro to the website.

I’m not so proud about how my gallery page came out looking mostly because almost all my artworks came out with different sizes, I tried fixing it in code, but the images were ending up either too compressed or overstretched. So, I concluded that it is not my fault that the artworks were made on a different canvas size, and I left it how it was.

In the final tab, the Contact Me page I added a simple box where the viewer would enter their name, email and a message to send a message to me. When the viewer sends a message it doesn't work since I don't know how to add my email on the website so the message from the viewer gets sent directly to me. Right now, if one clicks on "Send Message" it will tell them to send an email through an application. However, I didn't think that adding that detail was important. I then also added a link "← Back to Gallery" which if it's clicked on it will return to the Gallery page. Below this link there is also an Instagram link that if clicked on it will take the viewer to my personal Instagram account that features additional artworks. For the Contact Me page I removed the navbar and the footer.
